The theme was written not only to seek a new land, but also to capture the spirit of exploration in a spiritual quest to expand the frontiers of science and philosophy. Ting premiered at a concert in London in July 2016. The original score of the game was written and adjusted primarily by Jeff Knorr, with the help of Roland Rizzo and Pir Boucher [the themes of each civilization are played throughout the year, as different variations of the same song [in any renewable civilization, the melody of an ancient simple single instrument, it was turned into an orchestral version of the same melody in later times, symbolizing the evolution and growth of civilization throughout the era. The score was nominated for Music of the Year 2016 by the Game Audio Network Guild. Each civilization has its own major themes that evolve as players progress through the year. Each theme has four versions, each of which corresponds musically to one of the following periods: ancient, medieval, industrial and atomic. Times without era-specific versions feature the latest. For example, the classical period is themed on the ancient era, and the Renaissance period is about the Middle Ages. All civilizations except Smelia feature a specific ambient theme that plays out during the ancient, classical, medieval and Renaissance periods. During the game session, the theme (main and ambient) of the participating civilizations (including the excluded) will be featured in the in-game music. The version corresponds to the current era of each civilization. The main themes of the base game and minor DDC civilizations are written in bold.
